Daylight Theft Under Noses of the Lagrange Street Police in the Very Heart of Business District—Work of Experienced Men.

In broad daylight today, in one of the busiest streets of Boston, daring and desperate burglars, tempted by the alluring display of gems in a front show window of Arthur H. Beal's jewelry store at No. 43 Boylston street, smashed the glass, grabbed four or five trays of the valuables, and escaped.

It was said that there were 3,000 worth of goods in the window and the thieves got away without a fifth of them. The police, who were at the scene of the burglary soon after it occurred, declared that the glitter of the display had been too much for professionals, and that the jewels should have been locked from sight at night.

Within two minutes' walk of the Lagrange street police station, opposite the Hotel Touraine and next door to the Hotel Lexington, the robbery was committed between 6 and 6:30 o'clock.

MADE CAREFUL SELECTION
As soon as the robbery was over, the police made a careful selection of the goods that were stolen. The police found that the thieves had taken a large number of the most valuable pieces of jewelry in the store. The police also found that the thieves had taken a large number of the most valuable pieces of jewelry in the store.
